In Volume 4, number 1 of the Tourism and Identity Magazine we are sharing three scientific articles. In the first one, the four phases of the management process of collective agencies are investigated in detail, through the analysis of the case of the Nahuatl population in the Tosepan Kali tourism cooperative from a phenomenological approach, (Puebla, Mexico) before and during the pandemic caused by Covid 19; the second article seeks to establish whether Crypto Tourism in Argentina is a niche market and determine the position of the government regarding its existence; and in the third one, the concept of young indigenous farmers and the role of tourism to enhance their skills as endogenous actors are analyzed. The published articles have been written by researchers from Argentina and Mexico.

The Tourism and Identity Magazine continues with its quality policy, submitting all the articles it publishes to double blind review, and continues to be part of prestigious indexing catalogs and dissemination networks, such as Latindex, Latinrev, Base and Binpar among others.

We invite you to read, participate and spread our magazine and we thank those who have made this publication possible.
